The American Medical Association. The thirty-first annual meeting of the Association that was held in New York last week was, in many respects, a remarkable one. The convention met in the lecture room of the Young Men's Christian Association, and continued through Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. More than eleven hundred doctors were present, coming from South America, London, and all parts of the United States. This number included delegates from all the State and local organizations in America, and represented about fifty thousand medical men. The most eminent and distinguished doctors of the country were present, which shows that the best minds of the profession recognize the importance of these conventious. One of the prominent characteristics of the present convention was the tendency to eliminate the discussion of special projects and to direct the ener gies of all concerned to the consideration of subjects that affect the profession at The complete harmony of the proceedings this year was also a noteworthy fact. One of the principal ob jects of these conventions is the cultivation of a fraternal feeling among the multitude of American doctors, so that they can work to better advantage in advancing their science and elevating the tone of the profession. The papers that are read before these conventions are records of important investigation and study. The chance of a hearing before such a meeting, made up of the best judges of medical knowledge and ability in the land, is a strong incentive to study and fruitful labor, that gives as a result many valuable articles. These papers, together with a full report of the proceedings, are published by the Association and sent out all over the world, thus making precious contributions to the medical literature of the age. This exchange of records rapidly accumulates a comprehensive library, to which there was a large increase last year. The library now numbers several thousand volumes, and is of great value for reference. The great importance of the library is the bond of union it makes with foreign Asseciations, promoting an interchange of medical thought. Among the important papers read before this year's convention, were those on surgery, obstetrics, general practice, state medicine and diseases of of children, all of which will be published and sent abroad. The Association declared in favor of the metric system of weights and measures, and recommended the teaching of this system in all medical colleges. The naval and marine services were given the right of representation in the Association. Forces have probably been developed in this convention that will go far toward constituting a general college training a necessary preliminary college training a necessary preliminary college training a necessary preliminary whose support doesn't amount to anyed in favor of the metric system of weights to entering a medical college. It is the evident wish of the profession to elevate the standard of medical education in this country. The next meeting of the Association will be held in Richmond, Va., on the blunders of the "Senatorial Trinit the first Tuesday of June, 1881.

Conkling blundered badly in his att on the West Virginia delegation a floundered dreadfully in attempting extricate himself from the predicam into which he had plunged. Approval of the course of the three enting West Virginia delegates in the Chicago Convention continues to be expressed by the leading journals of the country. These expressions come from sources uninfluenced by the following of either side, and far removed from the yesterday: theatre where the exciting scenes were enacted. The Springfield Republican administers a rebuke to the Massachusetts delegation and commends the stand taken by Mesers. Campbell, McCormick and Burley, of this State, in the following language:

A humiliating spectacle was presented by the National Convention of the Republican party making pledges to Lord Conkling to vote for the nominee. James Freeman Clarke or President Chadbourne should have been there to stiffen the supple knees of Massachusetts.

Massachusetts! God forgive ber, she's a-kneelin' With the rest.

Three plucky men from West Virginia had the heart to make brief protest, and one cited in his defense his own hundred speeches for Hayes to Conkling's none. Somebody should have risen to quote the principles of party fealty as laid down by the Massachusetts Convention— "The duty of all Republicans loyally to the Convention, says:

The narrative of yesterday's transactions is simple and brief. The morning session was opened with a debate upon a metaphysical recolution, drawn by Mr. Conkling, declaring any delegate unworthy to hold his seat who should not pledge his honor in advance to support the Presidential nominee of the Convention, "wheever that nominee may be." tiou, "whoever that nominee may be."
This was adopted with only three dissenting votes, and the utter inutility of it was speedily demonstrated by Mr. Conkling's abandonment of an attempt to unseat the three dissenters

It was time for Mr. Conkling to extricate himself, if ever. As he rose he was received with a storm of hisses from all sides of the house. is had stated that they would support the unminee of the convention. This was a dexterous attempt to obtain Mr. Hoar, and in getting out of the mire, but Senator Hoar is quite as dexterous as Mr. Conking, and responded quietly that the chair did not deem it any part of its duty to place a meaning upon the speeches, of delegates. There was a general laugh at Mr. Conking's expense. Confusion spread all over the body of delegates on the floor and stage, and spectators in the galleries stood up to get a better view of the New York Senator, who was still standing. Talk broke out in a hundred laughter lasted until the episode was concluded. Mr. Conkling said, with his invariable elaboration of enunciation studiously maintained, that in the face of even as doubt upon this point, and in his unwill longess not to be even in danger of doing an injustice to any delegate, he would not insist upon the resolution, and therefore would withdraw it. There was a fresh and universal outbreak of jeers and merriment at this, followed by cheers, and Mr. Conkling resumed his seat, having sustained a real parliamentary defeat, and universal outbreak of jeers and merriment at this, followed by cheers, and Mr. Conkling resumed his seat, having sustained a real parliamentary defeat, and ways' seesion of a National Conyention. This ended the matter, and the seats of the three West Virginia delegates, all of whom was delegate-sat-large, remained unchallenged. JOHN W. SCHULTZE. didn't so decide. On the contrary, it decided that they might remain. It thereby ruled that Republicans were not bound to yote for any nominee that might be thrust on the party. And let us add it strictly followed Republican traditions in this. The Republican party only lives because it is the party of freedom. It must recognize individual opinion or it will die. Let it apply any cast iron rule as Conkling proposed and there will speedily be an end of it. The Democrats may do that—can do it—do do it. But the Republicans never can without losing that moral and thoughtful element of the party, that is its life. The three men of West Virginia were sustained in their declaration of independence, and therefore are right, not

And to have dared the convention to turn out any delegate who stood upon that ground.

The New York Herald, a paper that has lately been pressing Grant's nomination, in speaking of Conkling's attempt to read the three West Virginia dissenters out of the Convention, says:

The narrative of yesterday's transactions is simple and brief. The morning session was opened with a debate upon a metaphysical resolution, drawn by Mr. Conkling, declaring any delegate unit of the same on the same on the same that the same on vertical that the same on vertical that the same on vertical that the same of the convention of the On vertical that the convention declined to send my distinguished friend, Mr. Faulkner, who in many respects, is "the noblest Frenchman of them all," to the National gathering, because he was supposed to have a leaning toward Tilden and the bar'l, and this refusal was adhered to notwithstanding a statement by Mr. Faulkner's friends that he had never been to a National Convention as a delegate. It is presumed here that the district delegates, taking the same view of National Conventions as Tom Benton, who escended them worse than far barbons is dependent of the convention of the Conv nd bagnios) were unwilling to expose my illustrious friend to temptation, until he was old enough to withstand the crafts and allurements of the devil.

OTHER DELEGATES TO CINCINNATI. It is given out among the Democratic magnates here that Gov. "Jonce" Camden will be the fourth delegate at large from West Virginia at Cincinnati, two of the delegates at large already chosen being for course as follows:

The most striking feature in the proceeding y esterday morning was the rude leason taught the Senatorial bosses. The free minds of the prairies rulle their dignity deplorably. These undisciplined delegates neither shrink from their frowns nor hesitate to hit back and with a freedom and stinging force that amaze them.
